G. Societal and Policy Impacts

My research broadly examines the causes the causes and consequences of social and economic inequalities in the United States and other affluent nations. My scholarship explores how major changes in the economy, such as the financialization and globalization, has impacted income inequality and the quality of life for workers. My research on the effects of immigration on small towns and large cities, as well as my work on the causes of white-Latino segregation, explores how demographic, social, and political-economic factors shape the communities where we live. While the main goal of my research is to contribute to theoretical and methodological debates in the academy on the causes and consequences of inequality, my research also has policy-relevant implications. I have several contributions to note:

- I have recent work funded by the National Science Foundation related to developing a middle school youth advocacy program around disaster resilience in Savannah, which focuses on helping marginalized communities prepare for and respond to natural disasters like flooding and hurricanes.
- My research on the effects of religion on job discrimination has influenced other scholars and has been covered by news outlets like the Washington Post and BBC.

C. Educational Innovations and Other Contributions

Educational Innovations

Summer and Fall 2018, Urban Sociology, HTS 3012, I developed a service-learning component for this course where students interviewed residents of Grove Park, a gentrifying neighborhood, about how they view changes in their community. Students completed IRB Basic Training, learned basic interview techniques, and conducted interviews. This information was available for the neighborhood and Grove Park Foundation to levy for investments in community services.
